differ from each other. Each of them in the

In addition to all this it is to be borne in mind that our Public school system allows one hour a day for the teaching of distinctive theological tenets in a distinctively sectarian spirit by the authorised clergy of each Church. So that not only is there all the moral teaching and training of the purely secular school, but there is the Scripture lesson taught by the schoolmaster, and there is scope for a sufficient amount of "ism." Yet with all this provision for moral training, Scriptural instruction, and special religious teaching, Mr. GOSWOLD bravely maintains that our Public schools do not and cannot educate, but only instruct. So far as an upright, intelligent, and religious man goes when he is wedded to a theory.

A testimony in favour of the positive results obtainable from Scripture teaching in an unsectarian way in unsectarian schools is furnished by Mr. FRANCIS PEEK, in the August number of the Contemporary Review. In an article on the progress of education in England. Referring to the London Board schools he says:—“The Government inspectors are precluded from examining in, or taking any notice of, religious instruction, other than to see that the Government regulations in reference to it are observed, but it is carefully watched by the Board inspectors whose reports are on the whole most favourable. They point out the good sentences, but at the same time bear testimony that the all reflects a sound moral tone pervades the whole of the answers." An inspector adds: "That this is mainly the result of the teaching actually imparted in the schools, and based to a very slight degree of the home teaching, to which the competitors may have received, is proved from the fact that competitors from the same school, when attempting to answer the same question, almost in every case treat it alike—the answers are made up of the same facts and tinged with the same defects."

The results of home teaching are not indeed difficult to trace in a few of the papers, but taken as a whole, they show how much has been accomplished by the religious instruction given at the public elementary schools. This testimony, coming from an expert, as relating to schools only recently organised, does not support the theory that there is no education possible in schools where the religious teaching is unsectarian. The Frenchman who was told that the facts were again his theory, replied "so much the worse for the facts," but such a solid devotion to theory will not commend itself to the common sense of most practical people, who in the case of such a divergence will be inclined rather to say, "so much the worse for the theory."

Council, resigned it with the view of obtaining a place of greater influence in the representative Chamber. From the latest news it appears that Sir GEORGE GREY, the retiring Premier, informally advised the Governor not to accept the resignation. Sir HENRY ROBINSON, however, who has a mind of his own, and is not disposed to let his constitutional powers lapse, or his duties be neglected, because his views may happen to differ from those of his official vision, accepted the resignation because "he declined to lend himself to any device for placing a political opponent of the Premier under a disability not imposed by law." In coming to that decision, his Excellency showed a right appreciation of a Governor's responsibilities. When Sir George Bowen was Governor of Victoria, he was in the habit of talking ad nauseam about his impartiality, when in fact he allowed himself to be made the instrument of party, in straining the powers he possessed for the furtherance of party purposes. So it was Sir HENRY CHARLES DARLING before him. Sir HENRY ROBINSON, however, sees that a Governor is entrusted with independent powers in order that he may exercise them on critical occasions according to his independent judgment, and that it is his duty by so acting, to moderate the excesses of party conflict, instead of lending himself to any schemes or trickery, shared practice, or unfair dealing by which one set of politicians struggling for office may seek to outwit or to defeat another. Now we find Sir GEORGE GREY, in his place in the Assembly censuring the Governor for having accepted the resignation without advice, and stating that such advice had never been given.

This circumstance reminds us that however similar the Constitutions of the Australasian colonies may be in their broad outlines, the filling-in will often be found on, comparison to differ. Such a charge could not have been made with even a show of reason under our Constitution. With us the law provides that any member of the Legislative Council may resign his seat by a letter to the Governor; and that "upon the receipt of any such letter by the Governor, the seat of such Legislative Councillor shall become vacant. There is no question here of acceptance or non-acceptance. The latter New Zealand councillor and the postman. As soon as the letter is delivered, the transaction is ipso facto complete. In New Zealand also, it is made lawful for any member of the Council to resign his seat by writing under his hand and address to the Governor; but his seat only becomes vacant "upon such resignation and acceptance thereof by the Governor." The transaction, therefore, is not complete until the Governor has performed his part in

it. If the Governor refused to accept the member's resignation, the seat would not become vacant. But it is clear that in such case, as the law permitted the member to resign, the member's disability to do anything or assume any position which he could not do as a member of the Council, would not be practically a disability not imposed by the law, but by the Governor. The question, then, was whether the trustee was the advice

Government was bound to take the resignation of Mr. Hall's Ministers before dealing with Mr. Hall's resignation. Here again we find a difference between the Constitutions of the two colonies. With us the Governor is authorized to summon to the Legislative Council only such persons as he and the Executive Council shall think fit: he cannot make appointments to the Upper House without the advice of the Executive Council, any more than the Executive Council could make appointments without the advice of the Governor.

were found. For wrong, as he thought it to be, it should be altered. For himself, if a cabman gave him a ride, he should think that the fellow was to be pitied, not by a dishonest cabman and used to the injury of others to whom it belonged. He did not see the necessity for the cards. If he had any complaint against a cabman he would take his number, and obtain redress in the ordinary way. He thought that the cabmen and the passengers were equal to those in any part of the world. He said that they were to be peaceable and quiet, and to appeal to the laws of Parliament. The more quiet and orderly the streets, the more attention would their petition receive.

MR. DOWNEY moved,—"That a petition be signed by the citizens and public of Sydney, and be presented to the Parliament."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

First I simply write to refer to the cabmen's strike, and inconvenience to the public in consequence. I hope the Commissioners will in no way deviate from the policy they arrived at, but insist upon the regulation in reference to the cards. It would be a weakness to now say, for really I cannot see that the obligation which must upon us of any wishship to the cabmen, is not a very real one. I have often foolishly paid more than the legal fare, upon I may say most occasions. I intend simply to pay the regulation price, and of course I hear is intended to be followed by very many, so I fear cabby will find he is running a losing race. At, Mr. Editor, I trust these acts of violence which have been having taken place by some of the cabmen on strike.

—The course pursued will be duly inquired into, and the results of the investigation will be reported to the board. As a lady, having engaged a cab, was proceeding to her home, and on the journey therein was stopped by some disreputable cabmen, made to get out of the cab and to walk, and the driver of the cab was asked, "What do you want to do with the horse?" The horse was taken out of the vehicle and left in the street.

—I think these men have prepared a road for their backs. I trust the board will not be inattentive and will apply your obedient servant,

—I beg to suggest to the Commissioners that, by their decision to be the latest ideas in opposing lawful regulation of the cabmen, they are doing a great deal of injury to the collection of every one of their license. I have always heard much sympathy with the cabmen. In this sudden movement I have not a grain of it.

Yours faithfully, have resorted to the expedient of venting their indignation on the innocent public, who have had no hand in the matter; and thus, while depriving themselves of the means of living during the strike, inconveniencing employers, many of whom, perhaps, disapprove of the relation quite as much as the cabmen do. A more manly proceeding never was adopted by men not absolutely innately cruel. The regulation is really a harsh one, not called for in the interests of the public, the obvious course for the persons concerned in it affected was to have sought the support of the public, in an appeal to the Commissioners against it. A more proper protection to that body, showing reasonable

On the one hand, the strike is a sign of the citizens' desire for a change in the status quo or a modification. But what support do the citizens have? Do they hope to gain, or what useful end to achieve, by this strike? Is it a suicidal course of a strike? Do they suppose that the ordinary customers, or casual passengers by cab, are likely to be inconvenienced by the irritating annoyances, to which a strike is bound to lead? Or are the citizens not striking enough to force the board into reversal of its decision? Surely a more unselfish consideration of the regulation were desired, could hardly have been imagined. Assuredly, the community is not to be regarded as a body of persons without reason, nor is it to be thought to influence public officers having a duty to discharge, and who can have had no other object than that of —My letter in your issue of the 22nd was written for the purpose of righting a personal and public wrong; and have evidence that through the vigilance of the Council Education the recurrence of the offence has been provided against, I have every reason to be satisfied.

rather than this I expressed my opinion in reverence to the secular section of that community, but without any personal allusion, and only as a reason for my alarm at the threatened infringement of the educational code, an alarm caused by such facts as those reprinted in Thursday's Echo under the title of "Education in Spain;" and I claim to have treated with consideration the infant school mistress, whose name I abstained from using, and the honesty of my purpose I did not impugn.

The Clan Grant, from London, when in latitude 39° N. longitude 16° W., on the 10th July, anchored close to a large swampy ship's boat, painted white inside and bright varnished outside. On the following day passed a smaller boat and two water casks.

The Clan Grant, ship, with 454 immigrants on board, arrived in Port Jackson on October 9th. From the fact that the ship was allowed to come up the harbour and anchor off Fremantle, it is evident that there was no sickness board. For some mysterious reason, the officer of the ship whose duty was to give information to the Free settlers was not allowed to give any information to the Free settlers particularly as to the voyage, or the names of the passengers' health. We learnt, however, that the ship had 454 immigrants that, since the ship was put off July 10, less than 40 had died, there were seven deaths on board and 100 deaths on the land. There were 100 deaths on the land since the ship came to Port Jackson.
